The relation of migraine and gastric disturbance is a familiar example. Here mediation occurs through the centers of the vagus and the fifth nerve. Whether the afferent impulses come over the vagus or fifth nerve it is not always possible to determine. The syndrome sick headache is evidently a neurosis whether this neurosis is primarily neural, psychic, toxic, anaphylactic, chemical or physical, this does not modify the fact of the close integration of the centers of the vagus and fifth nerves, and the sensory and motor reflex symptoms resulting. Such visceral symptoms as nausea, vomiting, hyperchlorhydria, spastic con stipation, colicy pains etc., have frejuently been observed in connection with eye strain. The course of these reflexes is probably through the afferent sensory fibers of the fifth which mediate with the efferent motor fibers of the vagus. Temporary blurred vision, twitching and puffing of the eyelids are frequently due to visceral dysfunction, the afferent impulses passing over the visceral branches of the vagus, the efferent impulses over the third nerve. In headache, very commonly due to eye strain, both afferent and efferent fibers course through the fifth nerve Impulses over the parasympathetic nerves usually express themselves reflexly over nerves of the same system i. e., over the vegetative fibers in the third, seventh, ninth, tenth and eleventh nerves and pelvic nerve.
