We Don t Do God: Blair s Religious Belief and Its Consequences

By John Burton, Eileen McCabe

Bloomsbury Publishing PLC, United Kingdom, 2009. Paperback. Book Condition: New. 210 x 138 mm. Language: English . Brand New Book. In the days following the 2009 presidential election, world leaders lined up in the hope of being the first to visit Barack Obama. In the event it was Tony Blair who, two weeks into the new Administration, stood shoulder to shoulder with Obama at the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington. Blair was back on the world stage eighteen months after leaving office, the man of deep Christian faith who, during his premiership, became a political warrior. With the new President by his side, the former Prime Minister gave full vent to his belief in the importance of the global role of religion in political life: The 21st century will be poorer in spirit, meaner in ambition, less disciplined in conscience, if it is not under the guardianship of faith in God. The impassioned plea was a far cry from his public pronouncements as Prime Minister when he was virtually gagged on the question of religion which, advisers warned, was off message. Based on new material from revealing conversations from those closest to Blair, We Don t Do God traces the...
