I am content, said the pilgrim, in his deep, grave voice. And he lifted the drooping figure of his young wife from the beast, while the mother of Ruth hastened to fetch the bowl of hot porridge and a sup of new milk as well. When the little Ruth lay down on her bed that night her eyes turned eagerly toward the narrow window high up in the wall, through which the strange new star had looked for many a night. The star is grown very bright! murmured the child. Its long rays entered the dark chamber and seemed to caress her aching shoulders like the hands of angels. She slept at length and dreamed, and her dreams were still of the star which on that night of nights poured a flood of glorious light on the quiet little town of Bethlehem. In the cloudy imaginings of sleep the crippled child saw the silver beams raining down from the steeples of Heaven, while countless angels sang in the light: Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good-will to men! In the morning the mother stood over her child and wondered at the smile on the sleeping face. See! she said to her husband, our daughter sleeps, and hath known nothing of the night's happenings. Then as the wide, dark eyes opened to the light the wife of Ir stooped to kiss the little pinched face which was yet so dear to...
