However, the scheme adopted is to concentrate into the summer period, beginning in the early part of June and running until about the first of September, the field and laboratory practice courses, and work of that sort, so that the student gets a change from the lecture room into the shops or the field, and the change amounts, so far as he is concerned, to a sort of vacation. Now, with regard to the instructors, it has been found possible to arrange that each shall have his two or three months rest during the year--a thing that the speaker agrees is absolutely necessary for the instructor. His work does not change in character as does that of the student. The speaker objects to calling this arrangement in an engineering college the Chicago method, but he would assert that, under certain conditions, such as those at the Michigan School of Mines, it is practicable to get the ordinary engineering course within three calendar years. Professor Morgan Brooks.--The speaker wishes to call attention to the difference in character between commerical work and college work. He has had a great deal of experience in commercial work previous to taking up college work and got along very successfully with two weeks vacation in commercial work and sometimes even with one week or none at all, but he found that in college work one needs more of a rest or vacation. At the same time he thinks it is quite...
